zabālu “to carry”

G “to linger”: ša ina irtišu i-zab-bil || ú-¹zab¹-bil napšassu Jiménez 2017, 252: 43 “he whose life has lingered in his breast”. Normally D (said of sick persons and diseases), s. CAD Z 4 z. 4 and AHw 1500f. z. D 2.

+ zaba’u “a bear?”; Emar az^{a-su} : za-ba-ú Emar 551: 37 (Ḥ XIV 120; MSL 8/2, 121). Hardly related to dabû “bear”. Kogan 2005, 285 reads ša- and connects the word with the Sem. word for “hyena”, but the equation with az/asu is difficult.

zahalû “a silver alloy”; + Ur III

za-ha-LUM (CUSAS 3, 1379: 9’ and 1297: 7). In the texts from Garšana charcoal wood was used for za-ha-LUM-ŠE (Heimpel, CUSAS 5, 209). Note that Heimpel, ib. does not connect Ur III za-ha-LUM with SB/NB zahalû.

OB ina ZU-na-tim šakākim ZU-na-tum ikabbiṭāma u TÚG uštarraṭ Iraq 39, 152f.: 48f. (Mari let.) “when attaching the zu'nātus (to the garment, under no circumstances) should the zu'nātus become heavy and the garment become unraveled”.

CAD S 389b and CAD Š/1, 114b interprets ZU-na-tum as a plural form from sūnu II “a cloth trimming or sim”. Durand 2009, 94f. considers, however, this interpretation as implausibel, since the plural form of sūnu appears in the line 43 of the same text as sūnī. Note also that attaching of sūnū and of ZU-na-tum to the garment is described with two different verbs: šakānu N and šakāku. After Durand 2009, 95 ZU-na-tum is a derivation from za'ānu “to be adorned” and should be read as zu'nātum “ornaments”. S. also bittum II.
